(Image credit: BigTunaOnline/Shutterstock) Not interested in downloading a particular file or set of files in Chrome on your Android device right this minute? Just schedule that download for another time, courtesy of a new "download later" feature coming to the best Android browser in the very near future.This handy new option will allow you to choose the exact time and date for your files to begin downloading on your Android phone. According to TechDows (opens in new tab), you'll also be able to specify when your download should begin based on whether or not you're connected to a Wi-Fi network so you don't use up precious data. So, what's the catch? The feature isn't officially available right now. You can, however, do a bit of finagling to get it to work right away via the latest version of Chrome Canary, which is available from Google Play. Just don't expect that feature to be completely flawless the first time you give it a whirl, as that’s a very early version of Chrome designed to test out new features.Ready to give it a shot anyway? Here's how you can go about it. Launch Chrome Canary on your Android phone, and type in "chrome://flags" in your address bar. Type in "enable download later" and then look for the flag name to pop up. Click on the box that says "Default" and tap it so that it's changed to "Enabled."(Image credit: Tom's Guide)You'll need to restart your browser from here. Click "Relaunch" to do this automatically. When your browser relaunches, your new feature should be enabled. You can follow this process for additional flags in Chrome as well, should there be experimental changes you want to test out. Once the new download later feature is live, don't get too frustrated if it doesn't work here and there. True, the interface itself is live and can be used, but it appears to be a bit spotty at present. The full range of options that you'll be able to expect from the final version isn't quite available yet, either. You'll be able to select the exact area your downloads will eventually be filed in as well to keep from cluttering up your device. The plan is to add a "scheduled for later" tab to your browser when the new download feature has officially gone live as well. Unfortunately, there's no word on when the next stable Chrome for Android build will make its debut, but this is certainly one reason to start counting down the days until it's been released.The Android Chrome browser is also expected to introduce another useful feature with the full release of Chrome 86 in the form of LiteVideos. It should help further optimize media streams for users to make Chrome less of a resource hog in general. It seems Google is hard at work on a variety of interesting features for the next complete iteration of Chrome, in fact. We'll have to wait patiently and see what's coming down the pipeline over the next few weeks. The newest version is Android 10, and it offers some great features you’ll want to get your hands on. Installing the new OS is not too difficult. Before you install it, you have to make sure your phone is compatible with it and able to receive the latest update, which we can help you with. Then, we’ll give you some advice about getting the update. Make sure you have the right phone Julian Chokkattu/Digital Trends Unfortunately, not every Android phone is going to be eligible for the Android 10 update. If your device is over 2 years old, has already received two major Android OS updates, or is a lower-end budget device, you might not be seeing Android 10 at all. We’ve collected rumors for each of the manufacturers in our Android 10 updates post, so you can check there for the latest news on a variety of devices. However, there are some devices which are a given. All of Google’s Pixel phones have already received the update, while the latest flagship phones — like the Samsung Galaxy Note 10 range and Huawei’s P30 range — are also highly likely to get the update. You can also safely assume any phone that took part in the Android 10 beta is likely to receive the update. The Android 10 beta program was the largest in Android’s history, with an amazing 25 devices from 13 manufacturers taking part. Here’s the list of phones that supported the Android 10 beta: Asus ZenFone 5Z Essential Phone Huawei Mate 20 Pro LG G8 ThinQ Nokia 8.1 OnePlus 7 Pro OnePlus 7 OnePlus 6T Oppo Reno Realme 3 Pro Sony Xperia XZ3 Tecno Spark 3 Pro Vivo X27 Vivo Nex S Vivo Nex A Xiaomi Mi 9 Xiaomi Mi Mix 3 5G Google Pixel 3a Google Pixel 3a XL Google Pixel 3 Google Pixel 3 XL Google Pixel 2 Google Pixel 2 XL Google Pixel Google Pixel XL Back up your data While the final Android 10 build won’t be as risky as getting involved in a beta program, it’s still a really good idea to backup your Android devices regularly and before committing to the upgrade. Make sure to back up your Android phone to your PC to make sure your precious data is as safe as houses. How to install Android 10 So your phone has been confirmed to be getting the Android 10 update — hurrah! Now what? Well, you may have to wait a while. Some manufacturers take a little while to push the update out, whether it’s the speedier companies like Nokia, or the slowpokes of Samsung and LG. That usually comes down to how much work they have to do, and creating manufacturer UIs like Samsung’s upcoming One UI 2.0 can take a significant amount of time. Thankfully, when your update is ready, it’ll be pushed through to your phone and you’ll be prompted to upgrade. You can either upgrade right then and there, or you can choose to have your phone install it at a later time when it’s more convenient — you can even have it update overnight. If you’re really, really excited about it (like us) then you can manually check to see if the update has come in. To do so, head to Settings > System > Advanced > System update > Check for update. If you’re not using a stock Android phone, then your path to finding the updates section may be slightly different — for instance on Samsung phones, you can access Software update directly from the Settings app — but its almost always somewhere in your Settings. That’s really all there is to updating to Android 10. Unsure of what’s new in the operating system? Check out our Android 10 review. Editors' Recommendations With the arrival of Chrome Beta for Android, the convergence of Google’s desktop and mobile browsers has begun. Chrome Beta for Android includes desktop features such as tabbed browsing, Incognito mode and bookmark syncing. It can also list any tab that’s currently open on the user’s desktop version of Chrome, and open it on the phone. Now for the bad news: Chrome for Android is only available on devices running Android 4.0, known as Ice Cream Sandwich. Right now, that includes Samsung’s Galaxy Nexus and Nexus S, Motorola’s Xoom and Asus’ Transformer Prime. Users can get the browser free from the Android Market. Here’s everything else you need to know about Chrome for Android: How Does Tabbed Browsing Work? On Android phones, individual tabs don’t appear on screen together, like they do in some third party browsers such as Dolphin. Instead, you quickly move between tabs by swiping from the phone’s left or right bezel, or show all tabs by tapping a button next to the search and URL bar. On tablets, tabs are arranged side-by-side, in similar fashion to the existing stock Android browser. How Does Desktop Sync Work? Chrome for Android places desktop bookmarks in their own folder on the mobile browser’s new tab page, so they don’t get mixed up with other bookmarks. Another section of the new tab page shows any open tab for any computer that’s signed in to the user’s Google account. The mobile browser also syncs auto-complete suggestions from the desktop, drawing on your search and browsing history. What Other Features Are There? As TechCrunch reports, Chrome for Android uses hardware acceleration to make browsing feel smoother and snappier, and it can pre-load pages based on what links it thinks you’ll click, just like desktop Chrome (but only over Wi-Fi, to prevent excess mobile data use). It also includes some advanced HTML5 features such as Web Workers, which allow Web apps to update in real-time. Unfortunately, the browser doesn’t yet have a way to always request the desktop version of Websites instead of mobile-optimized sites. The browser also has one other feature not found in the desktop version of Chrome: When tapping on an area filled with links, a magnified view appears to ensure you’re clicking on the right thing. What About Plug-Ins and Extensions? The current version of Chrome for Android doesn’t support plug-ins, but All Things Digital reports that the browser’s architecture supports them. There are no plans to support Flash on the mobile browser, however. As for extensions, MG Siegler reports that Google is figuring out how to make them work best on mobile devices. Why Only Android 4.0? According to MG Siegler, Chrome for Android uses APIs not found in earlier versions of Android, so there’s not much hope for Gingerbread or Froyo users. As TechCrunch points out, Firefox for Android offers similar syncing features between the desktop and mobile devices, if that’s any consolation. What Will Become of the Stock Android Browser? Eventually, it’ll go away, but Google hasn’t announced timing. Still, with Android’s ability to set alternate browsers as the default, Android Ice Cream Sandwich users can make a complete switch to Chrome today.
