At the start of the Covid 19 Pandemic, and under an aggressive and demanding schedule, the DEXD team was confident of providing a robust, measurable and executable standard, while also focusing on improving the customer experience and helping to transform the transportation experience across the Greater Toronto Area (GTA). the current transport network within GTA expands at a rapid pace, it remains essential to ensure that the customer is able to reach their destination quickly, efficiently and safely. The tactile detection strategy integrates and reconciles the relevant research and standards in direct consultation with a diverse group of users in the visually impaired community.; The use of dire indicators installed along the edges of the transit platform and at the tops of the stairs, dire indicators are used to help people with loss of vision navigate more easily in environments such as transit platforms, staying further from the edge of the platform. With the wide variety of stakeholders and their wealth of knowledge and transport experience, we were able to successfully navigate, discuss and implement a comprehensive list based on feedback from stakeholders. Our approach to the project has come by immersing our team to understand the many user profiles in trÃonsito, understand their expectations, their challenges, while focusing on a human-centered design methodology. As system moves to an expanded service throughout the day, these guidelines will clearly express the GO Transit brand and raise the customer experience to about 65 million users µ a year. With the various modes of transport and their various interfaces, user consistency was a key component when evaluating the µ document. As part a multidisciplinary teamÂ we are creating a comprehensive conceptual narrative ensuring that the stations reflect the only single configuration in which they are located. Universal design is© a fundamental condition of good design that reflects the diversity of people who use it and does not impose barriers of any kind. In 2019, Metrolinx completed and adopted its first universal design standard. This pattern has proven to be vital to establish quality, consistation and equity in the customer experience of those with deficiating. To achieve this and be a true mind in serving the community of people with deficiency, the universal design standard could not simply rely on better local, regional and international practices. Inclusive consultation, with people with lived experience of deficiency is critical© to vetoing, refining and sometimes redefining design requirements. Requirements.
